More School is Better

I definatley think that all American children should be obligated to go to school from Monday to Friday for ten hours, and have half days every Saturday. The American children need to be well educated so they can make good choices in the future. Children are the future, and if we want our country to stay well functioning for years to come, the American children all have to have a good education. Our country also has to keep up with the rest of the world to stay successful. It is obviously very important to have America's children attend school for ten hours every day, except for a half day on Saturday, and free days on Sunday.

Children need to go to school more, so they can learn to make good choices in the future. There going to be a lot of choices that need to be made. Choices like what to do the the U.S. economy, businesses ect. If American children don't go to school more and learn how to make good choices, you can only imagine what'll happen to our country. We can prevent bad thing from happening by teaching the children, but we need time to, so we have to extend school hours.
American children need a good education. The importance of a good education is tremendous. Where would U.S. children get this education though? School. School is where all the education comes from and in an American's whole entire life there are only about seventeen years of it, so we need more hours and days in a week going to school. It is very, very important for American children to have a good education to keep the country up and running, and school is where American children get their education.

Keeping up with the rest of the world is something that always should be. If American children go to school more, they can learn how to keep up with the rest of the world. If we couldn't keep up, America would probably not be very successful. We might be deceived by other parts of the world and have our country left as almost nothing. Or our country might lose money and be left dirt poor. That shouldn't and won't happen if America's schools have more time to teach children how to keep up with the rest of the world.

Overall, it is extremely important to have ten hours of school every day except for half day on Saturdays and no school on Sundays. Choices need to be made, school is where U.S. children learn how to make them. U.S. children need to have a good education, school is where they get it. They also need to keep the country going, school is where they learn how to. School is where everything happens, so why can't we have more time of it?
